

HR Policy Assistant: Non-Instruction Domain Corpus

Educational synthetic corpus containing 61 policy-style paragraphs. It is inspired by common public employee-handbook structures but does not represent any real employer's policy.

- 1. Purpose and scope. This sample HR policy corpus is designed for a fictional organization named Northstar Services. It is intended solely for machine-learning education and demonstration. It reflects common employee-handbook structures and should not be treated as legal advice or as the policy of any real employer.
- 2. Policy administration. Human Resources maintains the official policy library, publishes approved revisions, and answers questions about interpretation. When a local law, collective agreement, employment contract, or benefit-plan document provides a greater entitlement, the applicable controlling document takes priority over this sample policy.
- 3. Employee responsibility. Employees are expected to read current policies, follow published procedures, provide accurate information, and ask for clarification before acting when a rule is unclear. Managers are responsible for applying policy consistently and documenting approvals, exceptions, and attendance-related discussions.
- 4. Definitions. A working day is a scheduled business day on which the employee is expected to work. A calendar day includes weekends and holidays. The HR portal is the organization's designated system for leave, attendance corrections, reimbursement claims, onboarding tasks, and policy acknowledgments.
- 5. Eligibility. Unless a section states otherwise, regular full-time employees are eligible for the benefits described in this corpus. Part-time, temporary, intern, consultant, and probationary employees may have different eligibility based on their written terms and applicable law.
- 6. Leave year. The standard leave year runs from January 1 through December 31. Leave balances are displayed in the HR portal. Employees should review balances periodically and report discrepancies promptly to Human Resources.
- 7. Casual leave entitlement. Employees are eligible for 12 casual leaves per year. Casual leave is intended for short, unexpected, or personal needs that cannot reasonably be scheduled outside working hours.
- 8. Casual leave requests. Employees should submit casual leave through the HR portal as early as possible. Planned casual leave should normally be requested before the workday begins, while emergency requests should be submitted as soon as the employee is reasonably able to do so.
- 9. Casual leave approval. Casual leave remains subject to manager approval, staffing requirements, and operational needs. Submission of a request does not by itself confirm approval. Employees should check the request status before being absent unless an emergency prevents advance confirmation.
- 10. Sick leave entitlement. Employees are eligible for 10 sick leaves per year. Sick leave may be used when an employee is unable to work because of illness, injury, medical treatment, or another qualifying health-related reason.

- 11. Sick leave procedure. Sick leave must be applied through the HR portal. When the employee cannot access the portal, the employee should notify the manager and HR using an approved communication channel, and the request should be entered later when access is restored.
- 12. Medical documentation. For leave longer than three days, medical documentation may be required. Human Resources may request documentation that confirms work incapacity or a recommended absence period while avoiding unnecessary disclosure of diagnosis details.
- 13. Confidentiality of medical information. Medical records and supporting documents are handled as confidential information and are stored separately from general personnel records where required. Employees should submit medical documents only through approved secure channels.
- 14. Extended illness. An employee who expects to be absent for an extended period should contact Human Resources promptly. HR will explain available leave categories, documentation requirements, benefit continuation, return-to-work steps, and any legally protected leave that may apply.
- 15. Annual or earned leave. Planned annual leave should be requested sufficiently in advance to allow workload planning. Managers should consider business continuity, team coverage, previously approved leave, and fairness when reviewing overlapping requests.
- 16. Leave carryover. Unused leave may be carried forward only when the applicable policy or written plan permits it. Any carryover cap, expiration date, or cash-out rule must be confirmed from the current policy displayed in the HR portal.
- 17. Leave during probation. Probationary employees may request leave, but approval and pay treatment depend on their offer terms, accrued balance, business needs, and applicable law. Employees should not assume that all leave categories are available immediately upon joining.
- 18. Public holidays. The annual holiday calendar is published by Human Resources. Employees assigned to work on a recognized holiday may receive substitute time off, premium pay, or another arrangement depending on location, role, and applicable law.
- 19. Unpaid leave. Unpaid leave is not automatic and normally requires written approval from the manager and Human Resources. Before approval, HR may review the reason, duration, available paid leave, operational impact, benefit consequences, and legal requirements.
- 20. Bereavement leave. Employees may request bereavement leave following the death of an eligible family member. The permitted duration, covered relationships, and documentation requirements are governed by the current bereavement policy and local law.
- 21. Attendance expectation. Employees are expected to report to work on time, remain available during scheduled hours, and complete required attendance records. Reliable attendance supports customer service, workload distribution, and team coordination.
- 22. Time recording. Employees must record working time through the approved attendance system. Entries should reflect actual start time, end time, breaks, approved leave, remote-work status, and overtime where applicable.

23. Attendance corrections. Errors in time records should be reported promptly. Employees should submit a correction request with the correct date, time, and reason. Managers must review corrections and should not approve entries they know to be inaccurate.

24. Late arrival. An employee who expects to be late should notify the manager before the scheduled start time when possible. Repeated lateness may lead to coaching or corrective action after the circumstances and any protected reasons are considered.

25. Early departure. Employees should obtain manager approval before leaving early except in an emergency. The employee may be required to record leave or adjust working time according to the applicable schedule and policy.

26. No-call, no-show. Failure to report to work and failure to notify the organization may be treated as a serious attendance issue. HR should be consulted before disciplinary action because emergencies, communication barriers, and legal protections may affect the response.

27. Flexible schedules. Flexible start and end times may be available for eligible roles when approved by the manager. A flexible schedule does not reduce required working hours, availability obligations, service expectations, or attendance-recording requirements.

28. Overtime. Non-exempt employees must obtain advance approval before working overtime. All hours actually worked must still be reported, even when advance approval was not obtained. Working off the clock is prohibited.

29. Expense reimbursement purpose. The organization reimburses reasonable, necessary, properly documented business expenses that comply with the approved reimbursement policy. Personal expenses, unsupported expenses, and costs outside policy limits may be denied.

30. Pre-approval for expenses. Employees should obtain required approval before booking travel, purchasing equipment, engaging a vendor, or incurring an unusual expense. Pre-approval reduces the risk that a claim will be rejected.

31. Reimbursement submission. Claims must be submitted through the expense system with the business purpose, transaction date, amount, currency, cost center, required approvals, and supporting receipts. Employees should retain original records until the claim is fully processed.

32. Receipt requirements. Itemized receipts are generally required. A card slip showing only the total may not demonstrate what was purchased. When a receipt is unavailable, the employee should follow the missing-receipt procedure and provide a truthful explanation.

33. Business meals. Business-meal claims should identify the business purpose and attendees. Alcohol, entertainment, gratuities, and meal limits are governed by the current expense policy and may vary by location.

34. Travel reimbursement. Approved business travel may include transportation, lodging, meals, visa fees, and other necessary costs within policy limits. Employees should use preferred booking channels and select reasonably economical options.

- 35. Personal vehicle use. When an employee is authorized to use a personal vehicle for business travel, reimbursement is based on the approved mileage rate or local rule. Normal commuting between home and the regular workplace is generally not reimbursable.
- 36. Reimbursement timing. Employees should submit claims within the deadline stated in the current expense policy. Late claims may require additional approval and may be rejected when the delay prevents proper accounting or violates tax rules.
- 37. Work-from-home eligibility. Remote work is available only for roles and employees that meet operational, performance, security, and location requirements. Approval may be modified or withdrawn when business needs change.
- 38. Remote-work request. Employees should submit a work-from-home request through the approved process and identify the requested schedule, work location, contact details, and any equipment needs. A request is not approved until the designated approver confirms it.
- 39. Remote-work availability. Employees working from home must remain reachable during agreed working hours, attend required meetings, meet performance expectations, and update their status when temporarily unavailable.
- 40. Remote-work security. Employees must protect confidential information, use approved devices and secure connections, follow multifactor-authentication requirements, and prevent unauthorized household members from accessing company systems or documents.
- 41. Remote-work workspace. Employees should maintain a reasonably safe, private, and productive workspace. Any workplace injury should be reported promptly according to the incident-reporting procedure, even when it occurs at an approved remote location.
- 42. Remote-work expenses. The organization reimburses remote-work costs only when the current policy specifically authorizes them and any required approval was obtained. Ordinary household expenses are not automatically reimbursable.
- 43. Onboarding before start date. New hires may be asked to complete identity, tax, payroll, background-check, confidentiality, and benefit-related forms before the start date. Documents should be submitted through approved secure systems.
- 44. First-day onboarding. New employees receive information about organizational values, workplace conduct, technology access, security, payroll, attendance, leave, benefits, and role expectations. Managers should provide a practical first-week plan.
- 45. Mandatory training. New hires must complete assigned compliance, privacy, information-security, safety, and role-specific training by the stated deadlines. Completion may be tracked in the learning system.
- 46. Policy acknowledgments. Employees may be required to acknowledge receipt of policies. An acknowledgment confirms access to the policy; it does not prevent an employee from asking questions or reporting a concern.

- 47. Probation and review. A probationary period, when applicable, provides time to assess role fit, performance, attendance, conduct, and support needs. Completion of probation is not guaranteed solely by the passage of time and should be confirmed in writing.
- 48. Notice of resignation. An employee who resigns should provide written notice to the manager and Human Resources. The required notice period is determined by the employment contract, grade, location, and applicable law.
- 49. Working during notice. Employees are normally expected to continue performing duties, completing handover activities, protecting confidential information, and following attendance rules throughout the notice period unless another arrangement is approved.
- 50. Notice waiver and payment. The organization may approve a shortened notice period, garden leave, payment in lieu of notice, or another arrangement where permitted. Employees should not assume that unused leave can automatically reduce the notice period.
- 51. Exit clearance. Departing employees must return company property, transfer records, submit final expenses, complete knowledge handover, and remove company data from personal devices where applicable. System access may be changed or removed according to security procedures.
- 52. Final pay. Final wages, approved expenses, leave settlement, deductions, and benefit end dates are processed according to payroll schedules, policy, contract terms, and local law. Employees should review their final statement and report questions promptly.
- 53. Health benefits. Eligible employees may enroll in available medical, dental, vision, or wellness plans during the permitted enrollment window. Coverage terms, employee contributions, exclusions, and claim rules are controlled by the official plan documents.
- 54. Retirement and savings benefits. Eligible employees may participate in retirement, pension, provident-fund, or savings programs when offered. Contribution rates, vesting, employer matching, and withdrawal rules depend on the governing plan and local law.
- 55. Life and disability coverage. The organization may offer life insurance, accidental-death coverage, short-term disability, or long-term disability benefits. Eligibility and payment decisions are determined by the plan administrator or insurer.
- 56. Employee assistance. An employee assistance program may provide confidential counseling, referral, or wellbeing support. Use of the service is voluntary, and program details should be confirmed through the current benefits portal.
- 57. Learning benefits. Approved employees may receive access to professional training, certification support, tuition assistance, or conference participation. Reimbursement may require prior approval, successful completion, proof of payment, and continued employment conditions.
- 58. Benefit changes. Employees should report qualifying life events within the deadline stated by the benefit plan. Marriage, birth, adoption, loss of other coverage, or relocation may permit a midyear enrollment change.

59. Policy exceptions. Exceptions must be documented and approved by the authorized manager and Human Resources. An exception granted in one case does not automatically create a permanent rule or entitlement for other employees.

60. Non-retaliation. Employees may raise policy questions, report suspected violations, request lawful accommodation, or participate in an investigation without retaliation. Concerns should be reported through HR, management, ethics, or another approved channel.

61. Accuracy and escalation. The HR assistant trained on this corpus should give clear general guidance, identify required approvals, and avoid inventing policy details. When a question depends on personal records, legal rights, disciplinary action, medical information, payroll calculations, or an unavailable policy term, the assistant should direct the employee to Human Resources.
